Why Business Leaders Are Needed Now More Than Ever

As a nation, we decided long ago that when a business opens its doors to the public, it should be open to everyone, on the same terms. But shockingly, many Americans still can't be sure they will be treated equally when they seek goods or services from businesses in their local communities.

No one should have to worry about whether they will be denied service or face hostility as they go about their daily lives.

That's why leading businesses and others across the country are joining together to oppose discrimination and declare that they are Open to All® regardless of race, ethnicity, national origin, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity and expression, immigration status, religion or disability.

Take the pledge!
